Epic Games has announced the creation of a brand-new studio in Seattle, Washington, to focus on "engineering efforts" for Unreal Engine 4. The new studio is primarily hiring programmers and engineers to work with its current engineering group.

"The proximity to key partners, the density of world-class talent and all the factors that make Seattle an attractive place to live convinced us that it is the perfect locale for Epic's West Coast operation," said Epic Games President Dr. Michael Capps.

"We are looking to hire even more of the best engineers around to contribute to Unreal Engine 4, which we believe is set to change the way we all make games."

Available positions at Epic Seattle include Animation Systems Programmer, Audio Tools Programmer, Engine Programmer, Java/Online Server Programmer, Lead Online Programmer, Rendering Programmer Active, and Tools Programmer. The full list of available jobs is here.

GameStop has pulled another couple of Amazon executives into its leadership circle, as the retailer today announced its new CEO and CFO are both joining from the online retail giant.

Matt Furlong will take the CEO role at the company, coming over from his position as head of Amazon's Australian business. Furlong was at Amazon for almost nine years, and prior to that worked a dozen years for Proctor & Gamble on brand, marketing, and sales strategies.

Joining him in the CFO position will be long-time Amazon veteran Mike Recupero, who most recently has been serving as VP of finance and CFO for the company's North American consumer business. Recupero had been with Amazon for 17 years, prior to that serving in roles as a project manager for Hitachi and Koch Industries.

This makes five Amazon executives hired into C-level GameStop positions since February. Other recent appointees from Amazon include chief operating officer Jenna Owens and chief growth officer Elliot Wilke, as well as chief technology offer Matt Francis.

In addition to the new appointments, GameStop released its first quarter sales results. For the 13 weeks ended May 1, GameStop reported net sales up 25% year over year to $1.28 billion, with net losses of $66.8 million compared to $165.7 million in the year-ago quarter, during which COVID-19 was declared a pandemic.

The retailer described the net sales bump as "overcoming a nearly 12% reduction in the company's global store base" due to hundreds of store closures, as well as "continued store closures across Europe due to the COVID-19 pandemic."

The company still isn't providing guidance for future results, but said net sales is the most appropriate metric to judge its performance by and May's net sales were up about 27% year-over-year.
